A New Hampshire native, Krystin Watts achieved a BFA in Illustration from the Rochester Institute of Technology. Ink and watercolor are her preferred mediums for their versatility; with ink providing the satisfying line work for her pieces, and watercolor providing the opportunity to layer and "paint with light" as Krystin describes it. From a young age, Krystin was steeped in both nature and fantasy, absorbing literary works from Orson Scott Card, and J.K. Rowling among others; and playing outdoors to the tune of her imagination. She has carried her love of the whimsical into the work that can be seen today. Krystin continues to hone her craft as a freelancer. For Krystin's most recent work, visit her Patreon.

Indian Museum Makes Top Ten

There are well over 100 Native American museums in the United States, and the Mt. Kearsarge Indian Museum of Warner was recently ranked sixth in the top ten best museums of its kind in the country. Powwows.com rated the New Hampshire museum for its incredible displays of artifacts and how it showcases the living Native American culture through events, powwows and its annual Harvest Moon and Naturefest, a traditional harvest celebration.

"We're pleased to be recognized as one of the top ten Native American Museums in the country," said Andrew Bullock, Executive Director of the MKIM. "Rather than a 'bigger is better' approach, this award recognizes our unique efforts to educate visitors through displays, events and workshops, which foster a better understanding of contemporary Native issues and responsible environmental stewardship."

Just one mile up Kearsarge Mt. Road from downtown Warner, the 25-year-old Mt. Kearsarge Indian Museum sits on 12.5 acres of meticulous grounds, with an arboretum and sweeping views of Warner's Mink Hills.

The Mt. Kearsarge Indian Museum is open by appointment during the winter, and will reopen with regular hours on May 1. Events and workshops scheduled during the winter and other information may be found on its website: indianmuseum.org.
